

Mini-Grants on Free-Market Economics: Research & Teaching

ACTONINSTITUTE
for the Study of Religion and Liberty

F A C T S H E E T

Quick Facts

- Proposal Deadline: March 31
- Grantees will be notified by April 30
- Grants range between $1,000 – $10,000
- Proposals must be submitted electronically

Successful grant proposals will:

- Have a clearly defined topic that the project intends to address, and how this promotes the knowledge and teaching of free-market economics.
- Have clearly defined objectives for the project.
- Have a clear project budget directly related to the project's proposed activities.

The Purpose

The purpose of this grant program is to enhance the effectiveness in the teaching and research of market economics for faculty at colleges, universities, and seminaries across the United States and Canada.

Request for Proposals

Course development—specifically adding new courses or strengthening existing courses in the curriculum which address the nature, morality, and purpose of free-market economics. This may include courses that deal with religion and economics, microeconomics, macroeconomics, political economy, ethics and economics, the history of economic thought, or other related subject areas.

Faculty research—identifying scholarly projects which show promise for advancing the understanding of free markets and, ideally, demonstrate how the free market relates to Christian faith and ethics.

Interested in Learning More?

More information about program and proposal requirements can be found at: www.acton.org/minigrant